There are obvious 'not-designed for mobile first' issues here such as the text that is cut off or too long to be seen at this screen-size. I'll point out some specific suggestions as well as some far-reaching Accessibility issues that are still pervasive across the entire site as well.

All these text examples fail WCAG AA & AAA standards for Color Contrast, except the Orange in Large Text passes AA. There are some compromises between the fore & background colors that would get it close enough. As an example: #ac3a0d (fore-orange), #e0e0e0 (back-gray)

A good resource to find a suitable mix is:
<http://webaim.org/resources/contrastchecker/>

Incidentally, I've sampled the actual Orange's used in the most recent PNG logo a bit darker than this as: #EF5B22 (light), #E54924 (dark). Would be good to match some consistency and might arrive at a better color mix.

The dropdown selections in these (and every other similar dropdown site-wide) are not compatible on iOS Mobile Safari (at least 40% of current audience, and potentially higher if considering those that check first then only bother to use the site on their computer after experiencing it not working). Installing Mobile Chrome on iOS does work but would be a rare % of users. This issue should be easily solved with replacement standards-compliant code.
